2. Marlin Brands’ Supply Chain

Marlin Brands’ suppliers are located across the world, and present different levels of risk that a modern slavery practice may be present.

Marlin Brands recognises that it has direct relationships with first-tier suppliers and that those direct suppliers may in turn have relationships with second-tier indirect suppliers. The capacity of Marlin Brands to know and to influence the modern slavery practices of suppliers is limited accordingly. Marlin Brands seeks to use established and reputable suppliers as a measure that will assist to reduce risk, but recognises that by itself does not prevent risk.

Some of Marlin Brands' brands continue to have, directly or indirectly, suppliers in China and the South East Asian region where the risks of modern slavery may be comparatively more pronounced. However, suppliers within China are predominately located in the port cities. The metropolitan nature of those cities and their location in the east of China mean that the risks of modern slavery are reduced due to the increase international and commercial exposure those cities have to the wider world. The regions and countries that Marlin Brands' suppliers are located in necessarily informs the actions it is taking to identify and mitigate modern slavery risks within its supply chain. Using publicly available information, due diligence with suppliers, as well as Marlin Brands' own experience, including personal visits by the buying team, Marlin Brands will undertake risk assessments of suppliers, taking into account each of the nation states that suppliers of Marlin Brands are located in.

Marlin Brands undertakes ongoing due diligence of suppliers to ensure that its direct first-tier suppliers are upholding standards that meet domestic and international laws relating to modern slavery, including (to the extent reasonably possible) that through those direct suppliers, there is confidence that second-tier indirect suppliers also meet those standards.

Publicly available information and resources to which Marlin Brands' businesses will refer in scrutinising suppliers include the Global Slavery Index, the Global Compact Network, TRACE International, the Transparency International Corruption Perceptions Index, and the Modern Slavery Registry.

3. Highlights from the reporting period

Marlin Brands continue to provide training to employees on issues related to Modern Slavery and practices that can lead to modern slavery practices. External training has also been obtained on anti-bribery and corruption which includes raising awareness of responsibilities for the organisation in relation to its interaction and dealings with countries where modern slavery practices may be at the greatest risk.

Following the statutory review into the Act, Marlin Brands has reviewed its modern slavery policy in 2024 so as to keep under active review the best approach to ensuring all of its employees are cognisant of modern slavery risks in its supply chain.

In late 2024, Marlin Brands recommenced in-person audits in its international supply chain. This is a key component in Marlin Brands' due diligence process and visits to suppliers include a requirement for employees to consider whether there were any risks present or visible that might suggest a modern slavery risk.

4. Ongoing actions taken

During the reporting period, Marlin Brands has had a focus on enhancing our understanding and capabilities to ensure that modern slavery risks in its supply chain are identified and mitigated.

Marlin Brands has for some time since well before the commencement of Australia's anti-modern slavery regime participated in recognised social audit programs dealing with similar and in some cases the same issues as the anti-modern slavery regime is concerned with. Compliance with those has been a required feature of its commercial relationships with customers and the work on implementation of Marlin Brands' modern slavery allows us to build on that longstanding work.

One of the primary actions that Marlin Brands has again taken in the reporting period to assess and address modern slavery risks in its supply chain has been the further implementation of an internal Modern Slavery Policy. The key development aligned to the Modern Slavery Policy in 2024 has been to prepare for, and re-establish, in-person audits of suppliers which has been restricted since the onset of the Coronavirus pandemic. The implementation of that policy has resulted in a broad and consistent understanding of the need to identify, assess and reduce risks of modern slavery within the Marlin Brands supply chain, over and above the due diligence that Marlin Brands already undertakes when considering the use of suppliers. In 2024, Marlin Brands re-commenced in-person visits to suppliers' facilities, including in China.

The development of a modern and revised supplier questionnaire in the preceding reporting period has continued to be rolled out across the Marlin Brands entities to further identify any modern slavery risks in its supply chain. To date, no substantive issues that raise modern slavery risks have been identified.

As part of the ongoing modern slavery awareness across the business, Marlin Brands has engaged with its advisors in relation to the Australian Parliament's consideration of introducing a ban on imports of goods that have been produced with forced labour. Marlin Brands' due diligence exercise has continued to confirm that from the information gathered, no tier-one supplier has been identified in recent public reports as having used forced labour in the production of their goods.

5. Looking forward

As Marlin Brands continues to develop its processes for mitigating modern slavery risks and implementing modern slavery risk management practices, our capacity to identify any concerns in our supply chain will increase.

Some of the steps that Marlin Brands will continue to refine in accordance with its policy (depending on the level and nature of the potential modern slavery risk) include:

- Updating and maintaining a supply-chain mapping review of direct and (to the extent reasonably possible) indirect suppliers.
- Conducting (consistently with the level of risk identified through supply-chain mapping) assessments of suppliers and the regions in which they operate against modern slavery concepts.
- Requiring suppliers to answer questionnaires about their conditions and practices focussing on suppliers' practices in relation to modern slavery concepts – including building on the newly developed questionnaire for suppliers.
- Integrating results of suppliers external and independent audits (conducted in their factories and trading houses) in risk assessment.
- Increasing the number of now re-commenced visits to suppliers, reviewing modern slavery concepts and the level of understanding by suppliers and confirming the accuracy of relevant information provided by suppliers.

- Measuring the success of in-person audits and assessing whether audit documentation requires variation to enhance Marlin Brands' due diligence of modern slavery risks as a result of those audits.
- Ongoing dialogue with suppliers.
- Ensuring that Marlin Brands remains informed of legislative changes arising from the review into the Modern Slavery Reporting regime and any outcomes on which Marlin Brands can develop its measures to further mitigate risks of modern slavery in its supply chain.

In terms of the steps that Marlin Brands has at its disposal to mitigate modern slavery risks, where escalation is required because Marlin Brands is of the view that the risks of modern slavery are not being mitigated or met by other actions, the Marlin Brands' Modern Slavery Policy provides for a series of further escalating steps including, termination of supplier arrangements. No escalatory steps have been required to be taken during this reporting period but those steps remain available and will be used in future reporting periods if Marlin Brands obtains information (through its ongoing due diligence) of its supply chain.

6. Ongoing training and manager-awareness

Building on the tailored annual modern slavery risk management training program with all key managers and contract administrators implemented in May 2022, Marlin Brands intends to consider whether further training is required. The initial tailored training program has been uploaded to the Marlin Brands intranet and is accessible to employees. A review of the program may indicate that, particularly where there has been staff turnover, that there requires further opportunities through training to educate managers in modern slavery concepts and awareness, but to do so in the particular circumstances of the Marlin Brands' business and level/type of potential exposure to risk.

As with the initial training, the key focus in our training and awareness activity will continue to be the identification of practical steps specifically in the circumstances of the particular Marlin Brands' business lines and under the Marlin Brands-specific policy for managing those risks (and not only generic awareness training). A key focus will be the identification of what (depending on the nature and level of risk) will potentially require escalation and to work through how that will occur in a practical way. Practical application of those measures is integral to Marlin Brands' mitigation of modern slavery risks strategy.

7. Measuring our effectiveness

Building on the previous reporting period and the due diligence process to investigate our supply chain in respect of modern slavery risks, the situation remains that Marlin Brands has a lot of information from most of its suppliers that enables it to assess (and where appropriate, address) the risks of modern slavery in its supply chain. The development of the supplier questionnaire will assist with further measuring our effectiveness at meeting modern slavery risk, whether that be as a result of answers provided or omissions on returned questionnaires.

To increase the effectiveness of our actions in the next reporting period, Marlin Brands will expand its due diligence process to assess whether its questionnaire is appropriately framed (including by reference to what information it has been receiving from suppliers) in order to understand and communicate with suppliers that it does not have sufficient information to make an assessment of the extent of any modern slavery risks. This adaption and ongoing development of our processes is central to increasing Marlin Brands' capacity to investigate and address modern slavery risks within its supply chain. Audit results will also be reviewed and any changes required to the audit process considered for implementation.
