The risks of modern slavery practices in the operations and supply chains of Middlemount Group

Middlemount Group's operations are located entirely in Queensland, Australia. In the reporting period, Middlemount Group's suppliers were almost exclusively located in Australia.

Middlemount Coal is aware that some suppliers may be part of corporate groups that have an international presence, or that are headquartered overseas, or that source substantial supplies from overseas suppliers, and that modern slavery risks may exist in these supply chains.

Most of Middlemount Coal's suppliers are local or domestic suppliers, operate in Australia only, and are subject to Australian law. Middlemount Coal therefore considers that modern slavery risks within its supply chain are generally low. That is not a cause for complacency and Middlemount Coal ensures that Middlemount Group is committed to maintaining a high standard of supply chain management.

The risks of modern slavery practices in the operations and supply chains of Middlemount Group are reviewed on a regular basis by management. Any concerns identified must be reported to the board of directors of Middlemount Coal.

The actions taken by Middlemount Coal to assess and address these risks within the Middlemount Group

Middlemount Coal is committed to ensuring that no one in Middlemount Group is disadvantaged or discriminated against for reporting in good faith a suspicion of an alleged contravention of the policy or laws regarding modern slavery. That commitment is underpinned by its whistleblowers policy and related processes.

Middlemount Coal's onboarding documents make suppliers aware of their and Middlemount Group's obligations regarding modern slavery and to elicit information that Middlemount Coal uses to assess modern slavery risks in its supply chain. For example, Middlemount Coal's supplier pre-qualification questionnaire requires that the supplier disclose information relevant to the supplier's exposure to modern slavery risks and to commit as a minimum to Middlemount Coal's standards and policy dealing with modern slavery.

Middlemount Coal addresses implementation and enforcement of practices to guard against modern slavery through ongoing contract management with its suppliers. In that process it considers in respect of suppliers whether risks of modern slavery exist or are enhanced by reason of the location, industry sector, known governance factors and types of products or services that relate to suppliers.

Middlemount Group has an active program for interview and audit of its suppliers in respect of their modern slavery policies and practices, including follow up audits if indicated.

In the reporting period to which this statement relates Middlemount Group has:

- continued its supervision and review processes for its suppliers in respect of compliance with modern slavery laws and Middlemount Group's requirements; and
- actively audited a selection of its suppliers.

How Middlemount Coal assesses the effectiveness of these actions

In the reporting period, Middlemount Coal has not become aware of any actual or suspected occasions where its operations or supply chains may be affected by modern slavery.

The assessment of actions to identify and address the modern slavery risks in Middlemount Group operations is an ongoing process. Middlemount Group continues to implement ongoing assessment procedures within the Middlemount Group. Its focus is to identify the parts of its supply chains that pose the greatest modern slavery risks and to audit and address those, particularly in respect of suppliers with overseas ownership or significant overseas procurement or other supply chains.

That process includes regular reviews of the results of supplier interviews and audits, and improving the ways staff and suppliers are informed of the efforts of Middlemount Group to ensure that its supply chains remain compliant with modern slavery laws and community expectations.
