AGT Foods Australia is aware that typical agricultural supply chains and the vast number of suppliers involved can include products associated with human rights related risks including modern slavery. Based on information from agriculture industry reviews and our internal assessment, potential human rights related risks could include:

- the use of child labour
- the use of forced labour
- purchasing grain commodities from suppliers in countries and regions where labour rights may not be protected or where employers may utilise vulnerable low-skilled workers
- the impact on communities and their traditional livelihoods due to monoculture; land use for cash crops; volume of water use; and the impact of effluent and wastes
- forced resettlement of communities, including indigenous peoples
- transporting goods over land and ocean with an associated risk of human trafficking through the black market
- discrimination of people.

It is AGT Foods Australia's continued assessment that there is generally not a material risk of modern slavery in its operations and supply chain

AGT Australia's approach to mitigate modern slavery and human trafficking risks includes a number of AGT policies and controls that further help to address modern slavery such as:

Effectiveness of our actions

In the spirit of continuous improvement, we periodically reassess the risks in our supply chain as it relates to Modern Slavery and Human Trafficking. This is achieved by reviewing our ethical compliance KPIs such as training and awareness compliance, ethical sourcing compliance, complaints and grievances recorded. These KPIs help us to focus our efforts in areas that we believe will make us more compliant with the Modern Slavery Act 2018 and our own policies. In fiscal 2026, AGT intends to deploy a modern slavery related questionnaire to AGT Foods Australia to help facilitate this reassessment of modern slavery risk in AGT Foods Australia's supply chain.
