Modern Slavery risks in our Operations

All HGS employees worldwide, including HSAB personnel, comply with the group-wide Code of Conduct, which includes compliance with human rights. The rules in the Code of Conduct make clear that nobody in the Company may in any way be forced to work with violence or intimidation. All forms of involuntary labor, child labor and human trafficking are expressly prohibited, as are other forms of employee abuse. Fairness, politeness and respect for individuals' dignity and personal rights are key principles that are enshrined in our Code of Conduct and that form the basis for how staff interact with each other [1].

We are aware that having diligent recruitment procedures is an important part of combating slavery and human trafficking incidents within Australia. To address this, we use pre-employment residency checks to ensure the legitimacy of employee's right to work in Australia. In relation to working conditions of employees, we have a local Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Working Group that works on initiatives to ensure employees experience a progressive environment of inclusion.

Having completed a risk analysis of our business operations, we consider that our operations present a minimal level of modern slavery risk, given the nature of the business undertaken, the operating locations, regulatory environment and internal risk mitigating processes.

We apply a uniform Code of Conduct for Suppliers to operationalize our commitment and to exert a positive influence over and above the legal requirements.

As a provider of general insurance products and services, the modern slavery risks associated with our supply chain and third-party business partners are generally low.

As we are writing direct specialty insurance, we also operate an agency model whereby authority to write business on our behalf is given to approved third parties (known as delegated authority). However, we recognise that delegated authority can present a greater legal and regulatory risk due to separation of operational and business practices. To mitigate this, we mandate certain provisions within our agreements with third parties such as: obligations to ensure compliance with all applicable laws and regulations, duties to conduct business with care and skill, and the relevant personnel must have the appropriate professional qualifications and experience; all of which is aimed at reducing the likelihood that working conditions fall below expectations.

We have completed a modern slavery risk assessment of our supply chain and third-party business partners and found there to be a minimal level of modern slavery risk.

Modern Slavery risks in our supply chain and Third-Party Business Partners

In addition to our internal codes of conduct for employees, we require our external business partners to demonstrate a similar level of compliance. We take care when selecting suppliers to ensure that they comply with national legislation on environmental protection and respect for human rights, and with our values. Procurement from regional suppliers [2] is one key aspect of this, to the extent that this promotes sustainability.

Actions taken to assess and address the risk

We have a responsibility to respect human rights and apply entrepreneurial diligence regarding protecting those rights. It is part of our purpose and values to respect and observe those rights where they lie in our sphere of influence and to avoid or prevent violations as much as possible. This includes taking the following steps to assess and address modern slavery risks.

- To ensure our continuing commitment to preventing human rights violations occurring within the supply chain, we require our employees to comply with a Code of Conduct, which gives concrete form to our values and explains the standards of conduct HGS expects from our employees.
- Locally, we have embedded a Modern Slavery Policy to reflect our overarching commitment to acting ethically and with integrity in all our business relationships by implementing and enforcing effective systems and controls to ensure, to the best of our ability, modern slavery is not taking place anywhere in the supply chains.
- We continue to engage with our employees and contractors by delivering modern slavery information and training sessions and providing adequate protection for whistleblowers. Our whistle-blowing system is accessible both internally and externally and enables human rights abuses to be reported (including anonymously).
- We have in place systems to assess and monitor areas of potential modern slavery risk in our business and supply chains to reduce or mitigate the risks of modern slavery occurring in our business and supply chains.
- Suppliers and other third-party business partners are aware of our approach to combating modern slavery risk and their corresponding obligations to support our endeavors by:
 - communications made to them explaining our commitment to compliance with modern slavery laws and our corresponding expectations of our business partners;
 - inclusion of appropriate contractual obligations reinforcing our business partners' commitment to compliance with modern slavery laws; and
 - issuing existing suppliers and new vendors with modern slavery due diligence questionnaires.

- We undertake a modern slavery risk assessment of our third-party business partners who service our core business on an ongoing basis. The risk assessment involves us identifying certain attributes of our business partners and by applying a risk matrix to determine the business partner's perceived level of modern slavery risk as being either high, medium or low.
- Annually we review our material suppliers. Each supplier addresses their modern slavery risk with their own Modern Slavery Statements. In cases where the business partner or supplier does not have their own Modern Slavery Statement additional steps to combat modern slavery risk are taken depending on the business partner's or supplier's position.
- In addition, the Talanx Group publishes a human rights policy statement on its corporate website in which it expressly commits to respecting human rights and to exercising corporate due diligence in respect of these rights.

Policies and Commitments

We are committed to ensuring that there is a minimal level of modern slavery risk in our operations, supply chains or in any part of our business.

Our policies and commitments that address human rights include:

- Modern Slavery Policy to reflect our overarching commitment to acting ethically and with integrity in all our business relationships and to the implementation and enforcement of effective systems and controls to ensure, to the best of our ability, modern slavery is not taking place anywhere in the supply chains.
- Code of Conduct outlines expectations of our people, which includes respecting everyone's human rights and treating everyone fairly and without unlawful discriminations.
- Code of Conduct for Suppliers is designed to oblige external partners to comply with human rights.
- Group Compliance Guidelines contain minimum compliance standards and rules on compliance with human rights that are based on the obligations set out in the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act (LkSG).
- Procurement and Outsourcing Policies and guidelines include respecting and protecting human rights including reducing the risk of modern slavery.
- Anti-Money Laundering and Counter Terrorism Financing and Sanctions & Embargo Policies stating that HGS must perform appropriate scrutiny and monitoring of transactions, account activity and customers, to identify and report matters where there is suspicion that a person is involved in illegal activity or breach of law. This may include human trafficking and child exploitations.

Remediation – receiving and responding to concerns

We continue to review and improve how we receive and respond to modern slavery concerns. There are mechanisms our people, partner and suppliers can use to report a potential incident of modern slavery through the following channels:

- Discussion with direct Manager and/ or a member of local Leadership team – HDI 's employees are empowered to discuss concerns with their leader.
- Discussions with the local Risk team – the Risk team can discuss and provide advice on incident management processes for our employees.
- Report through our Whistle-blower System – the confidential Whistleblower System is available to all employees, customers, suppliers and other business partners globally. The system can be accessed via our website (Access to Whistleblower System)

Assessing the effectiveness of our actions

Human rights are universal and fundamental rights that preserve the inherent freedom, dignity, and equality of all human beings. We respect human rights and invest in the wellbeing and resilience of our people and communities.

We are continuing to review the processes in place to assess the effectiveness of our actions to ensure we manage our modern slavery risks and meet our regulatory and legislative obligations.

Due Diligence Processes

We are committed to continuously improve our modern slavery supplier and third-party business partner due diligence and assessment process. We remain committed to strengthening our modern slavery monitoring systems and regularly measuring the effectiveness of the actions detailed in this statement.

We also use our Code of Conduct to guide the due diligence process prior to onboarding suppliers and service providers. This process ensures we only engage with suppliers and providers who share our commitment to preventing human rights violations in all forms.

Governance

The Board has overall responsibility for ensuring our local Modern Slavery Policy complies with our legal and ethical obligations. Formal governance oversight across HGS including HSAB is undertaken through the Board Executive Team, central Sustainability Team as well as the relevant Senior Officer Outside Australia.

HSAB is not aware of any instances of modern slavery having occurred as part of its operations, supply chain and third-party business partners.

HSAB's operations, supply chain and third-party business partners' modern slavery risk remains low.
